FUND COMMENTARY

A continuous decline of inflation in major developed market economies led central banks in Europe and the US to start the long-awaited cycle of lowering interest rates during the third quarter. The US Federal Reserve lagged the European Central Bank with its cut, lowering interest rates by half a percentage point in September and confirming market expectations that an era of easing has begun.

European equity markets throughout the year have been dominated by a fluctuating economic cycle, inflation and easing expectations. Scenarios have ranged from 'no landing' to 'hard landing' while eventually opting for a 'soft landing' scenario, a benign one for equity markets in combination with the interest rate cycle.

These market trends, which have triggered significant style shifts for European equities in 2024, have meaningfully impacted the performance of your portfolio. The first quarter of 2024 saw growth stocks rewarded, the second quarter was neutral whilst Q3 favoured value stocks. As a result, your portfolio underperformed its reference index during the latest quarter driven by negative sector allocation effects.

Throughout the year, the weak economic environment in China has been a constant headwind with many companies reporting weakness in the region. However, in the last week of September the country unveiled a surprise stimulus package that boosted China-exposed stocks. The jury is still out on the actual impact on the Chinese economy.

Novo Nordisk and ASML were the largest detractors from portfolio performance in Q3'24 but remain among the top year-to-date contributors. The two leading European growth constituents thus perfectly illustrate the powerful style drifts noted above. Investors in Novo Nordisk have recently focused on competitor announcements, the GLP-1 pricing environment and weaker-than-expected phase 2 clinical trial results for Monlunabant, a small molecule anti-obesity drug. Nevertheless, it is important to note that the company has delivered six consecutive quarters of organic growth above 24%, and in our view, the anti-obesity market maintains significant long-term development potential. In the technology sector, ASML's share price came under pressure following Intel's capital expenditure cut announcement and the potential for more meaningful export restrictions to the Chinese market. We believe that the company's long-term potential with latest generation EUV (extreme ultraviolet) lithography equipment remains unquestionable. In consumer staples, Campari detracted as growth is in the stranglehold of the US spirits market which remains weak. A slowdown of Aperol growth is against the backdrop of very high comparables to the previous year. The surprise departure of the company's CEO further weighed on Campari's share price in September.

Among the top contributors to portfolio performance this quarter was Straumann, the global leader in dental implants, which performed strongly on the back of better-than-expected Q2 results. Straumann is one of the rare stocks that has surprised on the upside thanks to its exposure to China, as the company enjoyed strong volume growth after the Chinese authorities introduced a volume-based procurement (VBP) process in early 2023. Sentiment towards the stock was further boosted after China's stimulus announcement at the end of September. In the payments sector, Adyen's first half results confirmed that the company is delivering on both its medium-term sales and EBITDA margin ambitions until 2026. The short-term outlook provided for H2 was also reassuring. Lastly, Accenture performed well after a weaker first half of the year, with strong bookings linked to larger transformational deals supporting the company's fiscal 2025 revenue and profit outlook. Generative AI bookings reached $1bn in Accenture's fourth fiscal quarter and $3bn in its fiscal year ending August 2024.

During the quarter, we rebalanced a part of our Linde position into its peer Air Liquide, a new portfolio position. The two industrial gas companies share similar quality characteristics in terms of barriers to entry, oligopolistic market structure and resilient growth prospects. At Air Liquide, with a new management team at the helm since 2022 and a new, more performance-oriented organisation, we expect the margin gap with Linde to somewhat narrow over the coming years. Separately, we took advantage of valuation opportunities in select technology stocks in the wake of the sector's underperformance during the quarter, while continuing to take profits from Novo Nordisk and other healthcare names on valuation grounds. We also reduced our position in LVMH given decreased visibility on the Chinese growth engine.

As inflation rates trended down, so did the nominal organic sales growth rate of your portfolio in the first half of the year. We expect the revenue growth rate to accelerate somewhat for the remainder of the year for company-specific reasons. In what remains a concentrated, high conviction portfolio, we continue to look for diversified and idiosyncratic growth drivers as much as possible.

When looking at the economic reality, the picture in Europe is less glamorous than implied by the strong year-to-date performance of European equity markets. Europe faces a year of pedestrian economic growth. Consensus earnings expectations have been revised down, with earnings now forecast to hardly grow this year. Performance over the year has been largely built on a valuation rerating as markets anticipated the peak of interest rates. Rightly so, as the month of September proved. Looking forward, however, we expect performance to be driven by earnings growth, and idiosyncratic growth drivers are a sound foundation for earnings growth in days of sluggish economic growth.
